A reporter has found a man who claims that ears are the best index of character. He has a large collection of ears to illustrate his views. "Now," he says, "just see how the lo' c of that ear goes down into the cheek: in front there is no lobe to the ear at all. I don't say, mark you, that every one remarkably typical in formation, even ears; they make very natural-looking ones out of glass now. But see, here's another typical ear."

"You see this thin cartilage, with the roll disappearing in the northeast cor-ner, and the ear itself coming almost to a point, somewhat like a fox's. That is the ear of a keen, unscrupulous, hard-hearted money-lender, one of those chaps who seem to take a positive delight in oppressing the unfortunate and in wringing from them extortionate interest for small accommodations. Some of these cars set well back, like a fox's when it is snarling; they are the worst cases. In others the upper point stands slightly forward; such men are rather shrewd and cunning than cruel,

These chaps add to their other aniable qualities a quarrelsome disposition that will make them snap and snarl at everything and everybody."

"But about the study of ears, which is the best way to acquire this knowledge?"

The only way is to select a few noteworthy specimens. Study the ears of some men whose character you are well acquainted with and mark their respective peculiarities. Then compare those men of similar characteristics, and see where their strongest resem-blances are; the first discovery of a principle for yourself is the only diffi-culty. It is like the St. Denis miracle, only the first step that has to be accounted for, all the rest is easy."

"Are ladies' ears susceptible of similar interpretation?"
"Certainly. If any one is about to get married I could tell him whether the woman he is about to wed is likely to agree with him or not. I could save many a divorce, or worse, if the people wanted me. But of course I couldn' have time to do that work, though have served some of my friends in that way.
